CASE STUDY · 2024

TAKUMI

Service & Product Design

A two-sided influencer marketing platform connecting global brands with creators and their agencies. Three user groups, two disconnected products, one strategic question unanswered.

Role Service & Product Designer

Methods Service mapping · Stakeholder workshops · Research · Ops shadowing

Designer Ashimi Adefesobi

Engagement ended before full delivery (business prepared for acquisition). Designs shown are proposed concepts; placeholder copy is illustrative.

THE BRIEF

Brought in by Dmitry, a co-founder, to answer a strategic question before a single screen was touched: which product, and which user, to prioritise first. Marco, the CEO, backed a competing concept (InfluenScore). The brief was open; the direction was not yet decided.

DISCOVERY

Mapped the whole service before picking anywhere to start, across five stages: Account Creation, Brief & Matching, Shortlist & Selection, Content Execution, and Analysis & Payment. The map was built collaboratively in workshops, which made the gaps visible before anything was fixed.

WHERE THE PAIN CONCENTRATED

The map answered Dmitry's question with evidence, not intuition: the shortlist was where all three user groups intersected. Clients had no side-by-side comparison, and rejecting an influencer sent the process back to ops with no recovery path in the platform.

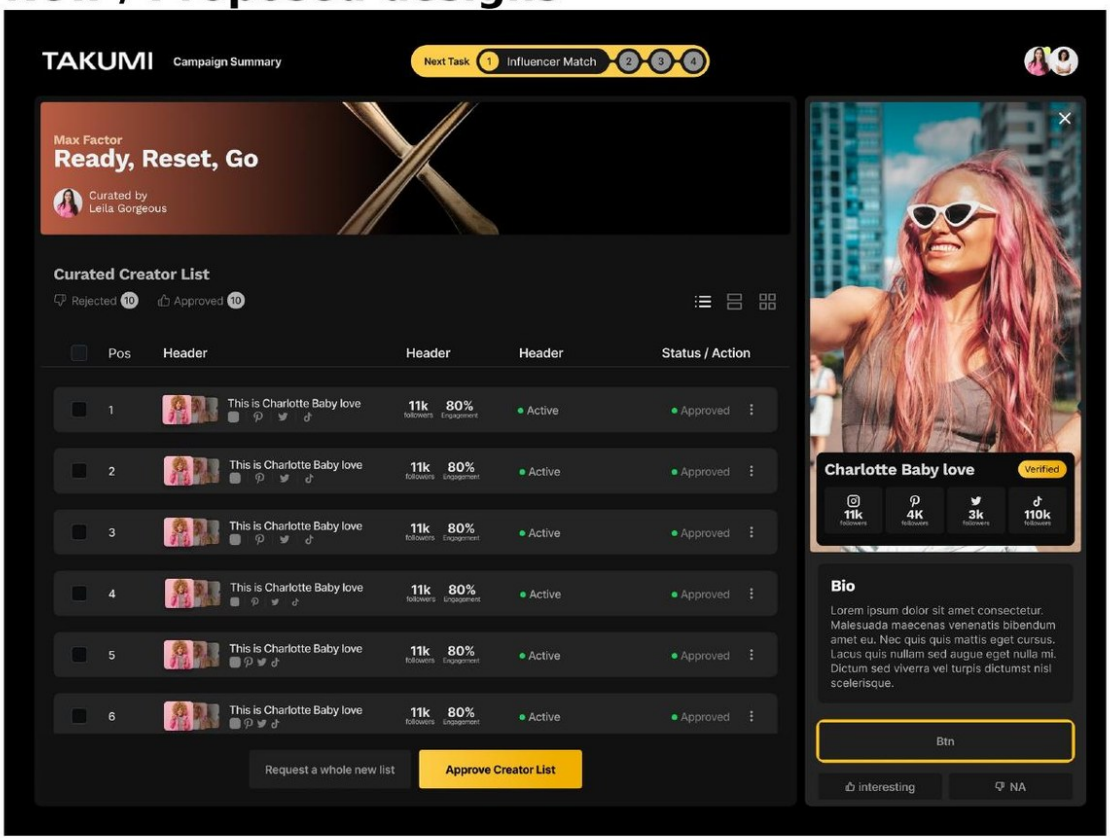

THE REDESIGN — INFLUENSELECT

Redesigned the shortlist as the place the decision actually happens: campaign context and curation made visible, rich creator profiles, reject-with-immediate-alternative, a side-by-side compare view, and an InfluenScore gauge with configurable weighting per campaign type.

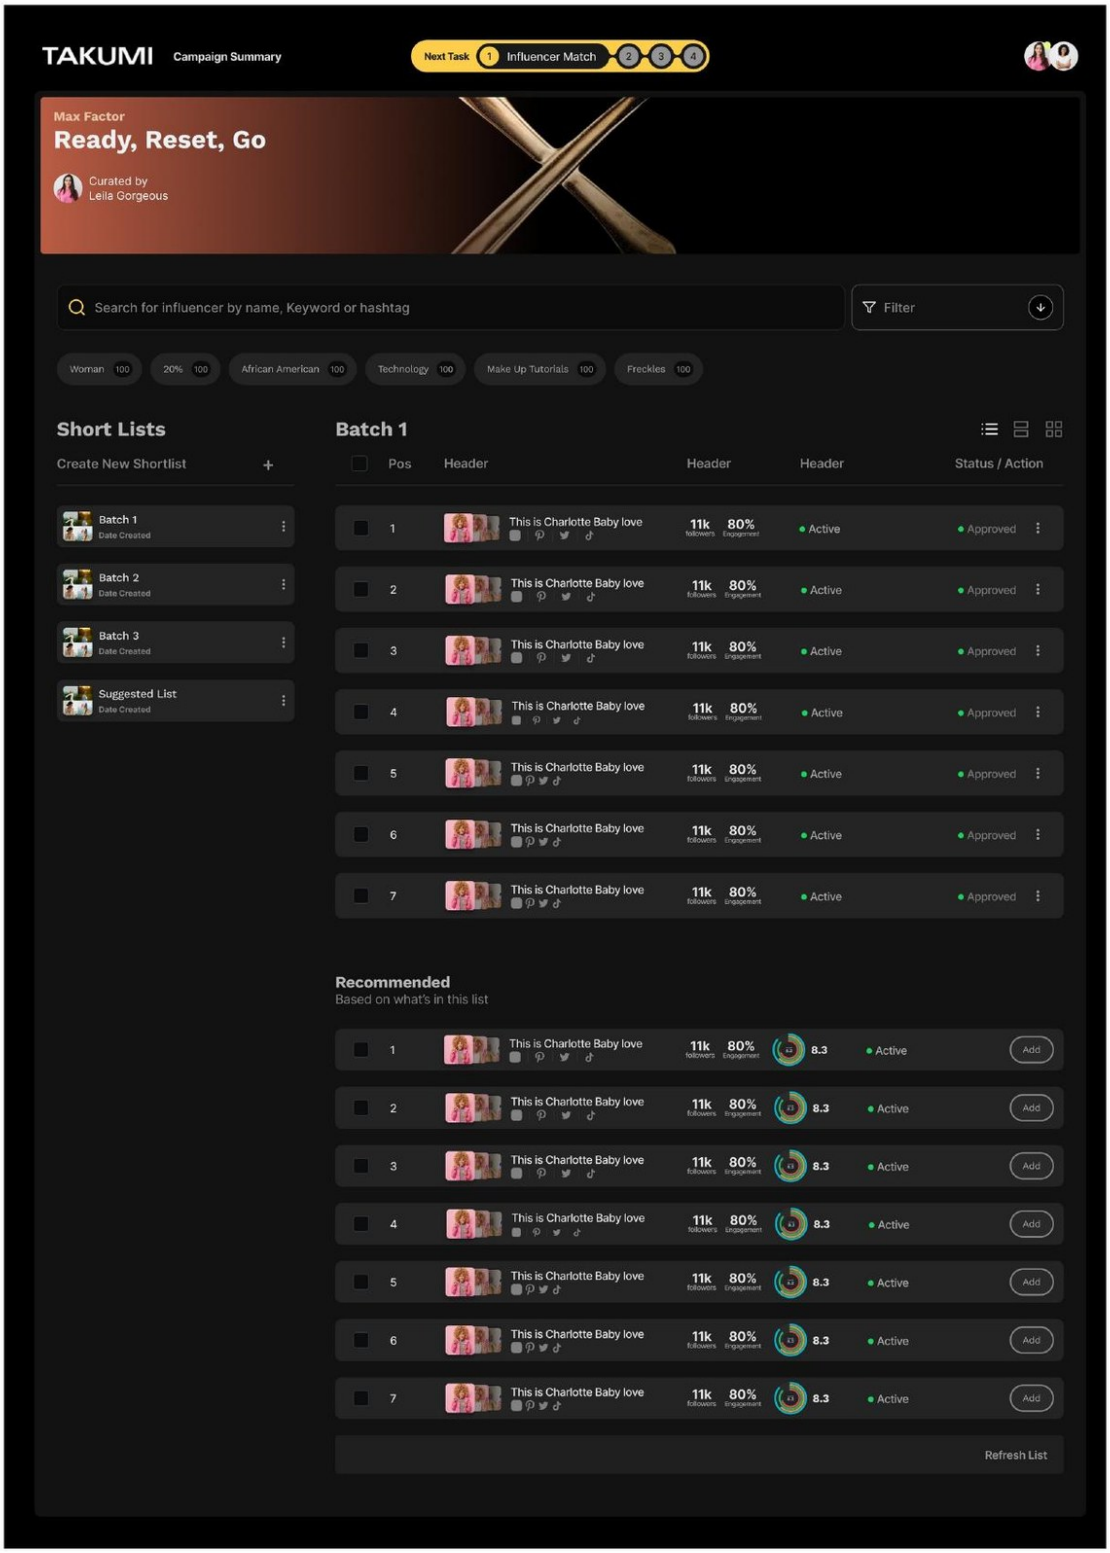

OUTCOME

Strategic clarity: a shared service map the team began referring to in meetings. Build-ready shortlist redesign: moved from approved concept to build-ready specification with documented rationale. InfluenScore direction set as a research and prototype framework ready to continue. Shared documentation standards introduced across product, engineering and ops.

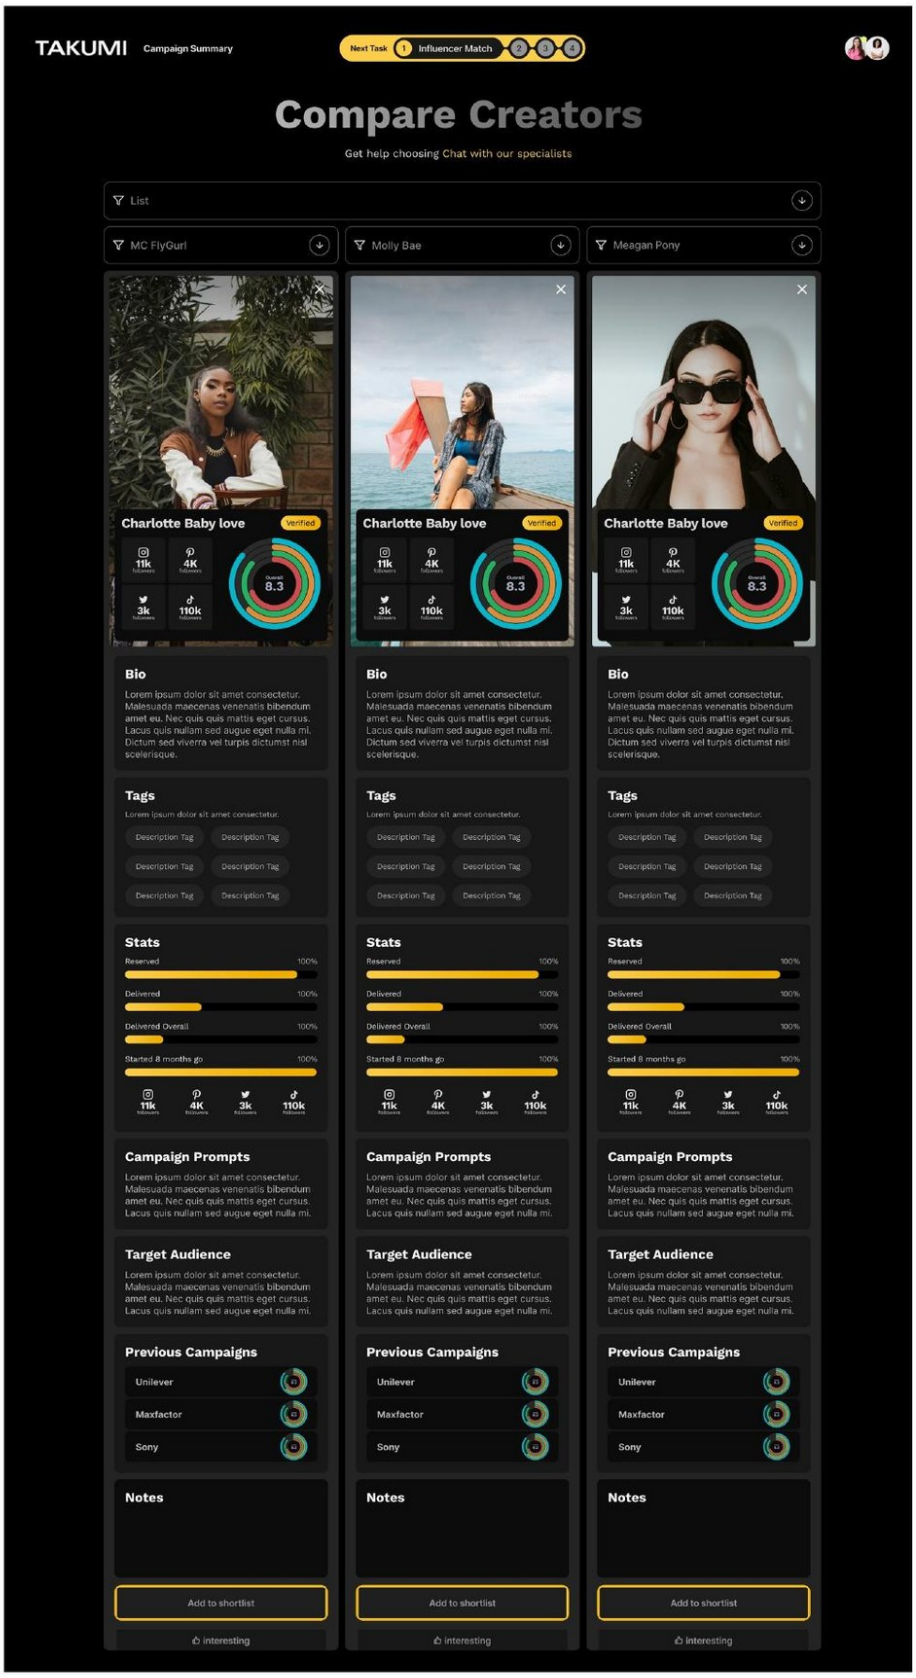

New / Proposed designs

Proposed shortlist with creator detail panel

Curated list with Recommended creators and InfluenScore gauges

Compare Creators — side-by-side view with per-campaign scoring